

In the Village of Harlem

Experience art exhibition at Countee Cullen Library

Compiled By Don Thomas

Wilhelmina Obatola Grant, a visual artist recently hosted the opening reception of an art exhibition entitled "Celebrating Strength, Perseverance and Triumph Over Challenges of Breast Cancer...and More!" The event took place at the Countee Cullen Branch of the New York Public Library in Harlem, in the Art Gallery on the Mezzanine Level.

The exhibition features 30-pieces of assembled art collections made from found and/or discarded objects which have been re-purposed into mixed media art and focuses on social issues such as breast cancer awareness and violence against women, can be viewed until, Saturday, October 31st during regular library hours. Groups will be accommodated by appointment and admission is FREE.

"Every woman has a militant responsibility to involve herself actively in her own health. We owe ourselves the protection of all of the information we can acquire...and we owe ourselves this information before we may have reason to use it," said Grant.

Wilhelmina Obatola Grant poses with her aunt Beatrice Miranda and the Curator of the show Jeremiah Kyle Drale displays his award.
